Market Review

Emerging market equities, as represented by the MSCI Emerging Markets Index, extended their rally of 2016 into this year and delivered a strong return of 11.45% for the first quarter of 2017. After outperforming developed markets last year, emerging markets continued to gain in relative performance as the MSCI World Index closed up just 6.38% for the reporting period. Market gains in emerging Asia and Latin America led the way, while Emerging Europe, the Middle East and Africa had more mixed results. The large style rotation into deep value, cyclical stocks that equity markets experienced in 2016 reversed in the first quarter of 2017 as growth stocks broadly outpaced value. As anticipated, the U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) raised its target rate in March, but conveyed a relatively dovish statement. This reassurance that the slope of future rate hikes would be less aggressive than originally feared triggered a follow-on surge in emerging markets. During the quarter, the U.S. dollar fell against most other major currencies, whereby select emerging market currencies posted some of the strongest gains. Among the larger markets, the standout performers were Mexico, India, South Korea, China, Taiwan, and Brazil, all which registered strong double-digit gains in USD terms. Mexico's rally in particular is notable given the uncertainties surrounding the Trump administration's trade policy. It seems as if some of the fears about protectionist policy and its potential impact on not just Mexico but several other emerging markets have abated given the lack of follow-through. India's performance also is encouraging considering the demonetization concerns that emerged from the end of last year. Optimism about the country's growth and reform prospects proved to have outweighed the concerns. Russia was the weakest major market globally and one of the few that posted a negative return in the quarter. It suffered from a pullback in oil prices and uncertainty about its relations with the West.

Fund Review

Mirae Asset Emerging Markets Great Consumer Fund (MICGX) underperformed its benchmark, the MSCI Emerging Markets Index, during the first quarter ending March 31, 2017. The Fund returned 10.89% whereas the benchmark gained 11.45%.

Key Contributors to Performance

- On a sector basis, Consumer Discretionary contributed the most to the Fund's relative performance due mainly to stock selection. In particular, stocks tied to the Chinese consumer contributed most of the positive attribution. The Fund's overweight exposure to the sector also had a positive effect.

- With regards to geography, the standout contributor to relative performance was China, mainly due to stock selection. Stock selection in Brazil also helped performance. However, it is instructive to keep in mind that the portfolio's country weightings are a function of bottom-up stock selection rather than targeted allocations to particular countries.

- On the stock level, the strongest contributors to the Fund's performance during the first quarter were Ctrip.com, Alibaba Group, and Randon SA.

Key Detractors from Performance

- On a sector basis, the largest detractor from relative performance was Health Care due to both stock selection and allocation effects. Health Care delivered less robust returns than most other sectors in the index so the Fund's significant overweight was a drag. Stock selection in Financials also had a negative effect on performance.

- Relating to geography, South Korea was the largest detractor from performance, due to both stock selection and allocation effects. Stock selection in Thailand and India also hurt performance.

- On the stock level, the biggest detractors were Amorepacific Corp., FirstRand Limited, and Bangkok Dusit Medical Services.

Outlook

The macroeconomic backdrop for emerging markets seems to have improved markedly from this time last year. Indicators have been suggesting that global output and trade are accelerating, which should improve prospects for several emerging economies. There is reason to believe that, finally, we are at the outset of a synchronized global GDP recovery. After years of declines in the GDP growth differential between emerging markets and developed markets, that growth gap seems to have bottomed and started to expand. Historically, the relative performance of emerging market equities versus developed market equities has been tied closely to this growth differential, so we have reason to believe that the outperformance we've seen so far in emerging markets can be sustained. In addition, emerging market company earnings relative to those of developed markets also have been expanding, after hitting a bottom in 2016. Other factors underpinning the positive outlook for emerging markets include improved current account balances, progress on economic reform, and declining inflation in select economies. A downward inflation trend provides room for central banks to lower rates; Russia and Brazil are two examples of economies that are benefiting from monetary easing while the U.S. Fed, in contrast, is raising interest rates. Attractive valuations also drive the case for a potential continuation of emerging market outperformance.

Our Great Consumer investment strategy remains focused on identifying high-quality companies which are best placed to benefit from sustained, secular growth in spending by an expanding emerging markets consumer base. We believe that amid uncertainties regarding the outlook for macro factors such as oil prices and politics, select long-term consumer-driven trends have a more clear direction. Our bottom-up fundamental approach seeks to invest in companies benefiting from such enduring trends, and which possess sustainable competitive advantages including superior management, product differentiation, a dominant competitive position, pricing power, and balance sheet strength. We believe that structural growth in the Great Consumer strategy remains intact and promising. In the first quarter of this year, the Fund remained meaningfully overweight the Consumer Discretionary, Consumer Staples, and Health Care sectors.

Gross Domestic Product (GDP) is the monetary value of all the finished goods and services produced within a country's borders in a specific time period.

MSCI Emerging Markets Index is a free float –adjusted market capitalization index that is designed to measure equity market performance in the global emerging markets. Investing in an index is not possible.

The MSCI World Index captures large and mid cap representation across 24 Developed Markets countries.
